Digital Scenery - Boulder County ColoradoThe Boulder County National Scenery is a huge, world-class destination! Located at an elevation of 9,700ft, this has to be one of the greatest airports in the USA. A 4,000ft MSL landing approach is not as simple as it sounds; the ground is mountainous and can be quite turbulent at times! Entering the landing strip on final is a real challenge, and landing, which can be tricky even in good conditions, is even more difficult! This scenery includes the whole Boulder County area; the famous ski resorts such as Aspen Mountain, Snowmass and Arapahoe Basin; the cities of Boulder and Longmont; major lakes such as Lyons, Long Lake and Many Springs; the nature of the Front Range and the Rocky Mountains; the Little Rockies and the Weminuche Wilderness, the famous Boulder Dam; and lots of historical landmarks such as the Brown Palace Hotel, the University of Colorado at Boulder, and the beautiful Foothills Parkway! As always, the terrain, roads and buildings are at a 1:1000 scale, and the scenery is also aerofly compatible!This scenery comes in two varieties; an 'Adventuring' version of the scenery and an 'Immediate' version of the scenery. We have categorised both these options in the main listing, and below is a full listing of all of the items contained within them.Boulder County National Scenery - AdveningWith over 6000 polygons, this package contains the following:Airports: Boulder County National SceneryAirport ILS - 27KgsBoulder County National Scenery Airfield LightingSystems: AFB-3021FMC-1Beacon tower3D / 4D BridgeAirlines: -OEM Part 1 - OEM Part 2 - Other Airlines - Legacy AircraftDCA Overview: -VFR - IFR - Instrument ProceduresDCA Provisions: • Approach on final • Approach terrain warning • Terminal area approach • Go-Around • Slow down near the runway • Dangerous terrain warningPlease note that this package comes with a combination of simulated and non-simulated objects. Gazebo Angled at 55 degrees, 7 knots wind, zero cloud cover, is a pleasure for a morning flight. Treetop Angled at 55 degrees, 5 knots wind, cloudy skies, is a pleasure for a morning or evening flight. Lazy Angled at 55 degrees, 5 knots wind, 0 cloud cover, is a pleasure for a morning flight. Layback Angled at 55 degrees, 4 knots wind, partially cloudy skies, is a challenge for a morning or evening flight. Freeflyers feel like a dream to fly. In fact, they are a perfect match for ultralight pilots wanting to push an envelope. In essence, a freeflyer is no more different than a lot of the gliders flown today. The construction materials may be different, but in the end, a glider needs wings to generate lift. A lot of windscreens, in reality, are simply an oversized hole for an airfoil set at an angle on the wing. The same principles apply to freeflyers as they do to any large, wind powered, ultralight with forward facing windscreens. The funny thing about the Eagle County wind tunnel is that the winds pick up and drop significantly throughout a single flight. I have used the air tunnel regularly (since my youth), and my best score was the time I followed a giant AC Cobra from the trees to about 350', yet was unable to get closer than about 25' due to surface wind shear. I have also had a very slow going hypobaric AC Swift soaring at 5 and 10 knots with my Viper wings and 10" large ground wheels. I never thought a spinning scoped Viper could get airborne that fast, since it always complained about the G-forces building up. Although I sometimes fear that I am a freeflyer because my wings are far too substantial, the reality is that I could literally hang Gliders from the C girders behind my house and I still wouldn't need an enormous P2 tail to raise flies. Freeflyers have become popular in Lakewood, CO since the airport paved in 1987. Initially, the lake city was a good area to launch and land this type of aircraft. The winds were surprisingly good, but the cruising altitude has become more of a hassle. For the average ultralight pilot, I don't blame them at all for wanting to launch and fly from land. In any case, Eagle County is
