Android provides several ways to lock the device - Sleep/Wake, Flash light,... Does anyone have any idea what parts of Android are responsible for 'lock screen'? Is there some kind of mechanism which could be queried? Background I know that the onCreate method of my activity gets called when you click 'back' on your lock screen, and that this activity is obviously protected by PIN code. But is there any other way Android 'knows' that I have entered the PIN/password, and can unlock the phone screen? A: Yes, there is an API to get information about the current state of the screen. It is called Power.isScreenOn() This method returns true if the screen is on, false if the screen is off or the display is off. getScreenOn() Gets the status of the screen; that is, whether the screen is on (true) or off (false). You can get the most recent state from the Method. mPowerManager.getScreenOn(); It also works in Widget
