RELATED RESOURCES: COMMISSION ACTION Commission announces additional $306 million for phone companies WASHINGTON—The Federal Communications Commission announced additional actions on Thursday to improve the quality of services provided to consumers by telecommunications providers. The actions are an outgrowth of orders that the Commission issued in last October's $2.5 billion refundable credit auction for federal universal service support, which resulted in 40 new, competitive, long-distance voice providers. "These additional actions mark yet another chapter in the ongoing evolution of the nation's telecommunications service through the transition from two decades of monopoly telephone service provided by a monopoly, to a competitive marketplace of alternative service providers," said FCC Chairman Julius Genachowski. "Our expanded refundable contribution program secures essential services for American households and small businesses that those electric and gas companies could not provide, and that have for decades been provided by the telephone companies. Today's actions are vital to that competitive marketplace, and that means improving the quality of service offerings for American consumers." The Commission announced through Notice of Further Proceedings that it was taking further action to improve the capacity of the switching centers that provide the basic connections between telephone companies and their customers: In Ordering the Switching Center Capacity Standard, the Commission modified its existing rules to require national broadband providers to meet a minimum number of publicly available, switched circuits that connect the local network of providers to the Internet and to existing telephone networks. NBP's will be required to meet: at least 2,000 circuits for each regional center or local exchange area, or L-CSA; and, at least 2,000 circuits for every local calling area served by the exchange. The Commission established various other refinements to the existing rules, such as requiring that vendors make upgrades or extensions of capital investment within a specified period, and to be in effect prior to the pending sunset date of the regulations. On a number of other issues, the Commission acted on technical comments in omnibus orders on July 19. The Commission accepted the following comments on technical implementation: NMTC and SLC Providers: there should be no rate-of-return imposed on the price of payment for the provision of tandem interconnect links or tandem access links but there is an implicit disallowance for unbundling charges. NMTC and SLC Provider Providers: the increased costs of real-time transport connection on electronic transmission and optical transmission facilities should

I didn't do any burning for the 8X Blu-ray. I just chose disc check and didn't checked the "make correction if required" option and it appeared. I'm still testing, but I already found it's doing OK. I think we already created a thread for this question but I wanted to try again. My frame rate is much more choppy on the PC version compared to the PS3 version. The PS3 is showing a much smoother video. Does anyone have any idea why this could be? Thanks! He posted this video on his blog. Check out these screen shots.
