DESCRIPTION: The development of oral contraceptives (OC) for diabetic women has been hampered by the unavailability of agents that will improve glucose tolerance without significantly increasing the risk of thrombosis, hepatic failure or other complications. Using human glucose transporter type 4 (hGT-4)-transfected CHO cells, the applicant will test the hypothesis that the inhibition of glucose transport and glycogen synthase activity in the liver results in potentiation of glucose uptake and glycogen synthesis in skeletal muscle. Additional studies will investigate the metabolic consequences of hGT-4 inhibition in skeletal muscle, and will provide information about liver-muscle interactions. In addition, the applicant will test the hypothesis that hGT-4 inhibition stimulates glucose uptake in adipose tissue. To test these hypotheses, the applicant proposes the following four specific aims: (1) to identify compounds that inhibit glucose transport and glycogen synthase activity; (2) to investigate the mechanism of hGT-4 inhibition; (3) to identify compounds with positive or neutral metabolic effects in skeletal muscle; and (4) to determine whether hGT-4 inhibition in skeletal muscle will cause changes in fat metabolism. To test their hypothesis, the applicant will use several strategies, including the development of a high-throughput screen (HTS) for compounds that inhibit glucose transport; co-expression and measurement of hGT-4 and glycogen synthase; identification of compounds that inhibit and activate hGT-4; determination of the structure of the active site of hGT-4; determination of the structure of the active site of glycogen

Under Rule 65, Tenn.Civ.Pro. Ann., a temporary injunction is granted, on a hearing ex parte, solely upon the filing of an affidavit with the clerk of the court where the hearing is conducted setting forth facts which satisfy the court that the applicant is entitled to a temporary injunction.

There is no requirement in the law that the applicant, in order to obtain a temporary injunction, be the domiciliary resident of the state where the hearing is conducted on the application for the temporary injunction, and in fact, under the authorities, an action for temporary injunction may be properly instituted and heard by the court, ex parte, in the forum of the state where the defendants reside. We think that the court below was clearly right in its action in denying the motion of the defendant Johnson City for a change of venue to Johnson City, Tennessee, and in granting the temporary injunction sought,

Of course the financial crisis of 2008-2010 was entirely different from that of the 1920s. The latter, during the era of the 1920s Wall Street, had many causes. That was a time of huge wars. The Great War. The war with the Allies (1914 to 1918) and then the war with the Germans (1918 to 1919). The massive construction of large military bases in Europe and America during that time. Nor were any of the 1920s financial problems confined to the private sector of banking. They arose in every sector of the economy. Manufacturing, both in the US (where there was a severe collapse of manufacturing after World War I) and in Europe (in the UK, Germany, France). Within agriculture, there was a series of crashes — the crash of 1921 in the US. The Great Depression. The Great Hunger in Ireland (also known as the Irish Famine of 1845 to 1852). In the UK, from 1846 to 1852. For the US, an even more severe economic contraction occurred in 1929-1933, during the course of the Great Depression. These were not problems that one could address by measures that were merely fiscal in character. In the US, it was necessary to take on those who were leading the 1920s to completely abandon their money-creating activities. To do that, the Federal Reserve Board and the Democratic Congress of the Roosevelt era (1933 to 1945) had to, first, eliminate all the elements in the system that were identified as (at best) causing the problems and (at worst) directly causing the problems. Among them: The Federal Reserve Board was eliminated by changing its structure to that of a national policy board of central banks. The Federal Reserve Act of 1913 was eliminated by changing it to the Banking Act of 1933. The Federal Reserve Act of 1935 was eliminated by the Banking Act of 1933, which made the Federal Reserve System a centralized national system of banks. The Federal Reserve System itself was eliminated by replacing it with a system of seven regional Fed banks. The Federal Deposit Insurance Act of 1933 was eliminated by eliminating the Federal Reserve System and replacing it with a system of seven Fed banks and other private commercial banks and commercial trust companies. The Federal Trade Commission was eliminated by establishing the Federal Trade Commission as a bureau in the Department of Justice. The Federal Trade Commission Act of 1914 was
