Elden Ring is powered by a brand-new engine that combines two smart game engines (Engine CPE and Engine EVE). The engine features an improved AI with a high amount of detailed debug tools, a tremendously increased storage limit, and a new icon format that is more stylish and displays beautifully in the mobile version.

Why use the Elden Ring Engine:

- Quick Memory Recovery. When a non-essential part of the game is deleted by accident, the player will be able to easily recover to the same state using the editor, enabling them to quickly master the game.
- Controller Support. Support for arcade controllers, including trackpads such as the Microsoft Sidewinder, was added by staff.

- Improved Speed and Performance. Compared to the core engine, gameplay speed and sound has been improved, the search function has been greatly enhanced, the memory consumption limit has been increased, and the network speed has been improved.
- Advanced Editing. Player data was analyzed to improve efficiency when editing large quantities of data. Some of the editor functions were replaced so as to increase the speed of editing and the number of edit options. In addition, import/export tools were also used. What's new:

Today, developer inXile announced that it intends to relaunch the classic Planescape: Torment, a classic RPG with deep prose and thousands of choices. The Planescape: Torment that most fans know is the isometric turn-based RPG; however, a PS1-era update being planned for the game will allow it to appear in HD form on PC. A little more than a year ago, inXile expressed interest in relaunching it and the development team is getting closer. Here's what they said at the time:

"We've tried to think how we would be most effective at fulfilling each aspect of the original and offer those things as a base for us to expand upon for the modern gamer. For example, the battle system is isometric so we wanted to translate it well to action and allowing you to use cover is key to what makes Planescape: Torment what it is. There are a lot of that kind of think we can do just by themselves and provide a modern and modern audience without the baggage of the licensing/computing power a PS4 or 360 can provide." "While being able to translate isometric battles will be an important component of the experience, the larger focus will be on adding more choices, adding more dialogues and presentations, and to try and make a much more modern version of what existing fans feel from playing the original. Because of our short development time and the atypical nature of how we wish to approach development, we don't plan on using an existing engine but rather one we produce ourselves that focus on our artistic needs rather than a platform that targets narrow monetization goals. The episodic nature also provide meaningful value for the experience over a longer period if there are some unforeseen complications that arise."

Vavasour or Vavasour of Trekyng (sometimes called Vavasour of the Trekyngs, or 'Vavasour of Huntington') is a large Motte-and-bailey castle located on a promontory at the southern end of the English county of Norfolk, about west-southwest of Norwich. History A motte-and-bailey castle has existed on this spot since the 11th century, following a gravel beach from 1 kilometre north down to the current site, which was about a metre above sea level (at the time) and about wide. It has been suggested that the mound on which it is built belonged to a moated site even earlier. There is no way of knowing whether the settlement itself is of earlier medieval date, although the fortifications are first recorded in 1215. Originally sited to the south-west of the present site, the castle would have been on the south-west part of the promontory. During the 13th century, the castle's position had moved to the north-east, and by 1188 the present site had been used. This site continued to be occupied until the early-14th century, when it was first acquired by King Edward III. The king had the chancel of the priory of St Mary and St Benet-upon-the-Roe built on the site. The site was enclosed by a double ditch and in 1458 was granted to Henry Beaufort, 1st Earl of Somerset. The buildings around it were also undergoing construction at the time, to provide lands to house his household and his dependents. Two stone bridges, a gatehouse and the chapel, as well as an oratory,
