To gain a better understanding of the way family physicians care for children in their practices, pediatricians, family practice residents, and pediatric nurses, as well as children and their parents, were each interviewed concerning ways pediatricians share information with children's parents, and vice versa. Each group also was asked about their opinions on the contribution of family physicians to their child's health, and each respondent listed one or more things that they liked about their pediatricians. The project is a component of the Department of Family Medicine's efforts to improve its services and to move from resource-heavy to patient-centered care.Transport and storage containers are often used to transport and store liquids, such as gasoline. Such containers typically have a sealed container for containing the liquid and a cap or other type of closure for the opening of the container. The container and cap may be placed on a suitable foundation, such as a support structure
