How to use Photoshop Portrait Formatting & Editing The most important things to consider when designing a portrait are the proportions of the subject, the background and the colors. When taking a portrait, pay close attention to the scale of the subject and the elements in the background. Essentially, a portrait consists of a well-proportioned subject, a well-placed background and colors that help tell the viewer what the subject looks like. There's a large variety of portrait sizes and poses to choose from, and many different techniques to create a good picture of a subject. When you're doing a portrait, keep in mind that the focus of the image is what's in the eyes. You'll generally see the eyes first in a portrait because they are the most important feature of a subject. However, a good portrait is not just about the eyes, but about the whole person. Finding the best angle When composing your portrait, pay close attention to how the subject's eyes react to light. If you want to use ambient light, you'll need to get your subject to face away from the light source, and find the best angle for your subjects eyes to get the best amount of light. A good way to tell when your light is going to be insufficient is to look at the subject's eyes and determine if it's hard to see any detail in their pupils. The better your subjects eyes react to light, the better your photo will turn out. An interesting concept is to use the five-box rule to find the best vantage point for your subject's eyes. The five-box rule says that to get the best light, you need to align the subject's eyes with one of the four remaining boxes. The subject's eyes need to be aligned in one of the four remaining boxes (1, 2, 3, or 4) to get the most flattering light for the eyes. Box 1 is light falling on the subject's left, the box 2 is in the middle, box 3 is light falling on the subject's right, and box 4 is light falling between the subject's eyes (the right side of the eyes). However, you need to also remember to consider how much room you have to place your subject and environment in the final image. A small subject in OKLAHOMA CITY – A newly released video shows a dog with a torn bladder who is rescued after being abandoned inside a truck. The video, which was taken on November 19, shows a truck leaving the scene of the accident. Someone can be seen walking the dog, who appears to be in pain. “I don’t think they realized that she needed to get up to the gas station,” said Prejean. “In that video, it looked like she was trying to get up.” When Prejean and her husband, Pete, left the gas station, they noticed the dog’s situation. “She couldn’t even stand,” said Prejean. “I went out to help the owner. I guess he left her in the truck with the doors open. She must have had a hole in the wall.” Prejean said she and her husband, who is a firefighter, were shocked by the situation they found. “When we saw it, we were like, ‘What’s going on?’” said Prejean. Pete says the dog is about a year old, and her name is Skylar. He says Skylar’s injuries are painful and she has some stitches. Skylar can’t be used for breeding, and Pete said she has already given birth to three litters. “We are considering just maybe letting her live with a family,” he said. “She’s not a puppy anymore, but is a young woman. I’m not really going to find out about her until she can walk and do her business.” But it isn’t just painful injuries that Skylar has overcome. “I came up against a whole lot,” said Prejean. Skylar is obviously scared, and she isn’t about to let the new owner take her to a vet. “She’s not going to let him touch her,” said Prejean. “She’s too scared. She’s hiding from him.” Prej

=== Text === Text can be used to format images in many ways. It can be: Align text to a particular side, top, bottom, left, or right Align text from a particular point to a particular distance away from the page edge or a reference point, such as the center of the page. Create bullets or numbered lists Create headlines or captions Set text in different fonts, different sizes, and different colors Create paragraph breaks (or new pages) Create dashed and dotted lines (on non-wide objects) Use to center an object == Filters == Filters are Photoshop’s default tools for altering images. They include: Opacity (hiding or showing elements) Grain (magnifying and blurring an image) Levels (adjusting the range of an image’s brightness) Smart Objects (which reduce the file size of a Photoshop document) Color correction Lens correction Red eye removal Filter effects == Adjustments == Adjustments are the tools that control the main elements of an image. Some of the most common ones are: Levels (brightness and contrast) Curves (contrast and brightness) Vectors (adjustments related to distortions) Hue/saturation == Palette == The Palette is the “tool bar” containing all of the tools and features in Photoshop. It can be divided into several categories: Grouping: The tool you use to group similar tools into categories Filters: The tool you use to apply one of the filter effects to an image Brushes: The tool you use to apply one of the brush or pen tools to an image Adjustments: The tool you use to adjust the brightness, contrast, etc. of an image Effects: The tool you use to apply one of the effects to an image == File Types == Photoshop uses a file-based system, which means that the programs uses a set of file extensions to store the data. You can save an image as a Photoshop file or as any one of dozens of other file types. .psd: An image stored in the Photoshop format. .png: A transparent image used for Web pages, such as backgrounds. .tiff: A photo or scanned image of any raster file format. .jpeg: A picture using the JPEG format. .gif: A picture using the GIF
