The same query is working fine in SQL Server Management Studio. I use the method createStatement and setString on the parameters. I've searched on the web without success. I'm using the following data type in SQL Server: Nvarchar(100) A: I guess that you're using N'é and N' is treated as string value. You can use NVARCHAR and use directly the Unicode N into your parameter. So your SQL should be changed as follow : N'é If you want to store the "é" just as it is on your String, it's like it in your question, you should use the NVARCHAR with the NCHAR or N" So in your case you will store 'e' as they are Search This Blog Saturday, November 4, 2015 No, there's no shortage of column inches here at our newspaper for which to make fun of the woefully stupid. None of the columnists at the two local newspapers of record (City Paper and the Daily Times) have much to offer as they react to the still-ongoing ordeal of the Baltimore Police Department's Homicide Unit's treatment of the city's often troubled youths. The Baltimore News-American is also guilty of engaging in "Trump-esque rhetoric" regarding the wrongfully convicted. The News-American prints what our president-elect often says, and makes fun of it. No, it's not Trump. His reckless, sometimes wildly inaccurate, tongue-talking is compared to ours and then made fun of. Like our own City Paper and the Daily Times, The News-American doesn't truly worry about its failure to look beneath the surface

Tattoos - Tattoo Designs, Pictures And Photos.Rajnani.The present invention relates to the catalytic reduction of nitrogen oxides in a flue gas which is produced during the combustion of fossil fuels and, more particularly, to the catalytic reduction of nitrogen oxides in flue gases which are produced during the combustion of fossil fuels such as coal, petroleum and oil shale. It is well known that nitrogen oxides are produced in a flue gas during the combustion of fossil fuels. The catalytic reduction of nitrogen oxides to nitrogen is particularly important in that it reduces the concentration of these toxic compounds in the flue gas. It is well known that the catalytic reduction of nitrogen oxides can be effected by the use of hydrogen and a catalyst. It is well known that catalysts which catalytically reduce nitrogen oxides are generally comprised of a catalytic material such as alumina coated upon a substrate such as refractory materials, cokes, zeolites and natural or synthetic charcoals. The substrate materials are used to retain the catalytic material on the surface or, if necessary, to withstand the temperatures encountered in the catalytic reaction. The catalytic materials are used to catalytically reduce the nitrogen oxides to nitrogen. The catalytic materials are generally prepared by depositing the catalytic materials on the substrate. This is typically accomplished by the use of coke or calcine as a binder or the use of a dry spray coke process to deposit the catalytic materials on the substrate. It has been found that the catalytic materials are often damaged during the preparation of the catalyst if exposed to excessively high temperatures. If such catalyst damages occur when the catalyst is used in the gas catalytic reduction of nitrogen oxides, the activity of the catalyst decreases. It is not unusual for the catalyst to experience a 10 to 50% drop in activity after the catalyst has been subjected to only a few regeneration cycles. Although a regeneration cycle is a specific reference to the heating of the catalytic material to a higher temperature above the deactivation temperature to cause the catalyst to catalytically reactivate, the general term "regeneration" is used herein to encompass the heating of the catalytic materials above their deactivation temperature. The more severe the catalyst damage, the greater the

In 1940, she published Une petite homme avant la lettre and left teaching to work for the Fonds Social. In the early 1970s, she worked for Quebec's newspaper La Presse and the Université de Montréal, and was president of the Maison des artistes artisans et arboricoles in 1970. She was a founding member of the Centre d'art et d'études culturelles, and in 1966 founded the Musée de l'art à plein air de l'Université de Montréal. In 1973, she opened the Joli-coteau forest reserve in Memphremagog, where her interest in woodland management and preservation led her to found the Centre de recherche méditerranéen des forêts.
