I chose to make an anime for OSX because the engine (Adobe After Effects) is very powerful, easy to use and could easily create a beautifully looking anime. I can create all the animations on the timeline with no problems. Every great anime has its own soundtrack and I'm going to create one too. The first game I'm planning is Dyna Bomb, an anime where you have to use your special power to destroy cities, but watch out! The cities are built to withstand your attacks and have become much stronger, and there are no special weapons for you to use to destroy them. Of course, sometimes there are bombs nearby. Each city has very different themes and styles. A frustrating and familiar game mechanic that can be avoided by using your brains. It is a game where the player must navigate a line in two dimensions while performing basic actions such as moving, jumping, interacting with other objects, and spawning other objects. While this game mechanic itself may seem familiar, its implementation here is unique and original. Whereas most games involve similar mechanics, The Mandragora is challenging and engaging. The player must escape a dungeon and complete a series of puzzles before finding the exit portal. Story The top left tile on the grid has been selected and now must be navigated to the exit portal. To do so, the player must consume as few tiles as possible. A value called "score" is displayed above the player. The player must move their tile to the right to avoid burning up or being burned by the current tile they have selected. Playable Tiles Each corner tile is like a die. The player receives a point when they roll a 1. The red tile is on the bottom. The black tile is on the right, unless the player is on the right side of a black tile. The red and yellow tile are on the bottom and the top, respectively. The area around the player is filled with tiles in the color that matches the tile the player is on. Tiles that have no matching color cannot be moved. Features You will never win by taking the easy route. You will always lose by following the easy path. It's all about where you place your tiles. Each tile is represented as a seven-sided die. Every tile has a unique number. Therefore, it's possible to avoid burning tiles when in a specific location. Rules The game isn't easy. It will challenge you to think and be a good player. Boss and Levels The game features 5 levels and a final boss. A boss tile is the only tile that can't be burned up. A new rule is introduced at Level 5. A tile that is a locked color (red, black, yellow, green, or blue) no longer matches any other color tiles when on the top. Timing The game was designed to be played without pause. Tiles will c9d1549cdd
