Histamine-2 receptor antagonists inhibit the release of guinea pig hepatic prostaglandin E in vitro. The release of prostaglandin (PG)E by perfused guinea pig liver was measured by radioimmunoassay of the first perfusate. The release of PGE was stimulated by the addition of crude lipopolysaccharide (LPS) to the perfusion buffer. Treatment of the animals with histamine-2 receptor antagonists (H2), such as cimetidine and ranitidine prior to perfusion significantly reduced the increase in PGE release induced by LPS. In the case of cimetidine, the reduction of PGE release was correlated with an increase in the hepatic content of PGE. The data suggest a possible involvement of H2 receptors in hepatic PGE release. Image copyright Getty Images A huge chunk of taxpayers' money is going to the EU, it was revealed on Tuesday. Some £9.2bn of our money was pumped in to Brussels between 2011 and 2014 as the UK contributed 15% of the UK's gross domestic product. That represents £1,454 per citizen for every person in the UK. But the UK pays an average of £25.50 per person to the EU - and £11.50 of that goes to the EU's budget. It's been called the "hidden EU" - and Tuesday's figures show that there is a huge number of reports of EU spending. The biggest spenders are the European Parliament, with the UK sending £2.7bn in 2014, and a £1bn grant for the EU's agricultural and fisheries policy. But it's the less well-known parts of the EU budget that are turning out to be the most costly. The Council of the European Union, which represents the EU's 28 heads of state and government, is the most expensive in terms of per person spending. These are some of the reports the taxpayer has to pay to fund the EU: Council for European Union A report on the EU's budgetary position shows a £21.1bn budget for 2014-2020 - which represents 2.4% of GDP. That comes to around £1,000 per person for each citizen of the UK. The biggest spenders are for the common agricultural policy, at £2.7bn, and justice and home affairs, at £4.2
