Brag on the CommunityTumbler A thread for you to advertise the game in. Bragger's Run will be leaving early access on August 8th, 2018. The development team at MumboJumbo have been busy and are almost ready for release. Here is a short list of what's been added:

- Polish: You'll find your characters now have 5 different weight classes to reflect their actual class. Most bosses will be much more dangerous for the heavier classes.
- Quests: You can now choose what actions you want done when approaching an encounter, as well as who you want to show up as when you talk to them.
- Runes: Can now be found all over the place, putting an emphasis on finding, as well as buying and creating them.
- Tower Balance: All of the towers now have their own separate pool of power. If an encounter falls into your enemies tower, they can now damage you before being destroyed themselves. This effect now stacks!
- Higher Item Drops: An increase in the amount of items found with most drops.
- Stacking Resistance: Enemies will now have reduced resistance to debuffs as a direct result of many encounters getting tougher. When receiving debuffs, you are no longer subject to them.

Brag on the CommunityTumbler A thread for you to advertise the game in. Strider will be leaving Early Access on August 8th, 2018. Update: We've changed the target platforms as of a few hours ago. Strider has finally come to a destination that everyone can enjoy, with a gameplay overhaul and a game full of features. Old spells and powers are being phased out and replaced with a mechanic that allows characters to use new spells and powers as they are created. Experience, with a timer that allows players to level up, has been added to help characters and their quest progress. Strider is introducing a brand new region to explore, as well as enemies that are very different from the main game. The final release will feature a campaign mode that allows players to go through the map of the world and experience different story lines. What was added during early access?

- Story: The story for Strider is coming to completion and will be much more fluid and personal than in the past.
- Strider will be receiving a series of 3 new enemies, all at various points throughout the journey.
- Boss Enemy: A boss battle that will go much further than you may expect from a normal boss. This enemy will become stronger as the

What's new in Underground:

DreadOut, the Kickstarter-funded action game in development at New Zealand outfit Polygon Pictures, is nearing completion. It's actually coming along rather nicely, with an all-star lineup of musicians already on board to help lay down the sound, courtesy of Des Church, Chris Lord-Alge, Alex Verdi, John Congleton, and... my own hero... Zakir Hussain. Now, as a born and bred music freak, my first impulse here at Polygon is to simply gush at the diversity on show here. Never before have I heard bands of such variety be a part of the same piece of game music. The fact that this is the soundtrack to a beautifully gruesome, innovative game is nothing short of inspiring. It'll be available as a DLC pack for those who pre-order the game from the Kickstarter, but since I, like anyone who speaks the name Zakir, am a massive fan of his work, I decided to speak to him in order to better understand what he's done here and why he's involved. "I wanted to invest in something that felt a little more like game music to me," explained Zakir, when I asked him about his involvement in DreadOut. "It's always felt a little more in the realm of game soundtracks than film soundtracks to me. And I wanted it to have a more aural aesthetic, but it's a horror game so I needed to get over my own issues around 'The Plastique Series' and move on. "We've been musically lining up artists from all over the world, from all different genres, and it's working out really well! There's been an unexpected flow in who's been the big flavour of the month these days, and who has inspired people to take up their instruments. Sometimes, the most unlikely people are the ones who you think have the strongest connections with your project. "We are very lucky to have his musical diversity. He's famous for so much, but if there's one thing I learnt when I was making music, it's that your collaborators will come up with things that you wouldn't have envisaged." The DreadOut Soundtrack is currently available to watch in its entirety via the game's official site, although if you'd prefer to access the album as it

Details: I have recently done some more work on my mod, I hope you will enjoy playing it! Have fun in it! Caveats: I'm not too great on modding, since I'm new to this, so I'll probably find issues and things that I should change later. I made a mod that automatically uses the first weapon you have (or a specific weapon, can be changed in the options menu) when entering/leaving an area.
