MOSCOW — As soon as American forces and their allies begin to conduct airstrikes on Syria, Russia will retaliate and close off the main corridor through which U.S. military supplies could enter the war-torn country, Russia's deputy foreign minister said. The statement came a day after a U.S. airstrike in Syria killed Iran's top general and dealt a devastating blow to Tehran's support for the regime of Bashar Assad. Russia, which opposes military intervention in the Syrian civil war, has long been warning that the United States and its allies would suffer negative consequences if they attack Syria, and it has repeatedly stressed that any such attack must be carried out in coordination with Moscow. Asked Thursday how Russia would respond to the strikes, Deputy Foreign Minister Sergei Ryabkov said that he could not yet go into details. But, he added, Moscow was ready to take measures to ensure that its interests were not harmed. "We took measures in accordance with the Russian-American agreements. But, of course, we will take additional measures," Ryabkov told a news conference at the Russian Foreign Ministry. "There is no doubt that the main corridor for the delivery of foreign military equipment for Syria will be closed," he said. He added that the United States and its allies, including Britain, are not only making contingency plans for such an attack on Syria, but have already begun conducting airstrikes. Ryabkov said that Russian President Vladimir Putin had been consulting with his defense and foreign ministries throughout the day. He did not say what actions Moscow had taken in response to the U.S. attack, but Russia has already ordered its own military to begin redeploying from Syria in order to be ready for any potential attacks. Ryabkov said that the U.
