Here's The Latest From The OLD MAN OF ATLANTIC CITY: The Empire State Building is open for business. That's right. The Empire State Building finally reopened its doors last week after being closed for a number of years. The second tallest building in the world opened to the public on a gloomy day last week in New York. The popular tourist destination was closed on July 5 for a routine maintenance, but was set to reopen for the first time since 1988 on July 16. Fire burned for almost 13 hours at the Empire State Building and caused $3.2 million damage, reports Fox news. Officials said that a dishwasher caught fire. Experts said the cause was a fire near the top of the building. Two men were rescued from the building. Police and fire officials said the top of the building looked like "a giant woodstove." Officials said the company in charge of the building was fined $2,500 and has been issued a six-month shut-down order by the Department of Buildings. The maintenance of the iconic NYC skyscraper has taken nearly a year. "This is a great achievement, and we are glad that the Empire State Building is reopened to the public," said Mayor Michael Bloomberg. "This magnificent building built in 1931 represents New York City's very best architecture, and the Empire State Building is an important part of the city's history and image," said David Childs, President of the Empire State Development Corporation, which runs the building. The building will be open to visitors until September 24.

The mechanism of radiation-induced apoptosis in human leukemia cells. The present study examined radiation-induced apoptosis in several human leukemia cell lines (HL-60, K562, and KG1), which differ in their radiosensitivity. No increased apoptosis was observed when cells were treated with radiation alone, or at a suboptimal radiation dose. Radiation-induced apoptosis was identified by a TdT-mediated dUTP nick-end-labeling (TUNEL) assay or by a flow cytometric analysis of DNA content. Characteristics of the radiation-induced apoptosis were examined, such as the time course for apoptosis, the relationship between radiosensitivity and apoptotic response, and the role of p53 in apoptosis of human leukemia cells induced by radiation alone or in combination with agents that inhibit DNA synthesis. In human
